EDITOR'S NOTE

A Clearer Focus

Dear reader,

We are starting a new Newsletter. This will be the first issue of an informative paper for foreign audiences regarding events within the civil society of Kosovo. A quarterly publication from January-April 2014, the newsletter will feature the work of Olof Palme International Center partners in Kosovo, as well as news concerning civil society and public authorities in the country. Civil society today is considered one of the main factors of a country's democratic consolidation. It is playing an increasingly important role in the governance and development in the world. In most countries, however, knowledge about the situation and the forms of the civil society is limited. Kosovo is one of the countries that has claimed to have embraced democratic values, thus the role of civil society in this context is increasingly important. Currently civil society in Kosovo is experiencing a number of developments but still faces big challenges. Although some civil society organizations in Kosovo are raising their human capacity and financial resources, the bulk of the sector remains heavily dependent on international funding. OPIC, in cooperation with its partners in Kosovo, is making efforts to bring about substantial changes in this direction with hopes that the partnership between public authorities and civil society becomes structured and stable, so that the citizen can be part of democratic decision-making.

We sincerely hope that you will enjoy our newsletter,
EC Ma Ndryshe

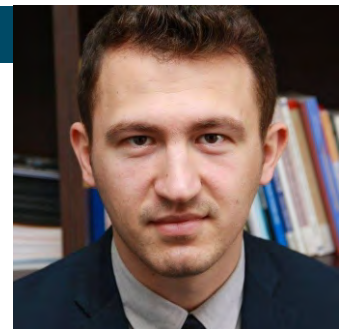

A Genuine Watchdog Role

On the day when he formally assumed his post, the mayor of Lipjan Municipality was accused of violating the law. CSO Youth Association for Human Rights (YAHR) which oversees the work of the municipality concluded that the appointment of the Deputy Mayor for Communities violated the law regarding local self-government. In this case, the mayor may propose the appointment but he cannot legally make the decision on his own. In these circumstances, after the reaction of YAHR, at the second meeting of the Municipal Assembly on January 29, 2014 the deputy mayor was elected on the basis of the recommendations that were made by the supervisor of the Municipal Assembly. This is yet another case in which civil society action has fought to prevent malpractice and has therefore served as a watchdog over state institutions. Follow the TV story of this case. In the following links you can find more information on monitoring activities of YAHR in this municipality: YAHR monitoring and FB page.

5-QUESTION INTERVIEW

Internal democracy of political parties

Since Kosovo underwent an election period, this issue of the newsletter conducted a short interview with Albert Krasniqi from the KIPRED Institute. Albert offers his views on the democratization of political parties in Kosovo.

1. How do you assess democracy within Kosovo political parties?

Political parties are now starting to make the first steps towards their internal democratization, in response to a growing demand from their membership. But, still many of them remain far from democratic practices because the decision making is centralized to the leader or a close group around him/her.

2. What are the main challenges to the democratization of the political parties?

The biggest challenge is the reduction of the impact that leaders have on their own political parties. Most of them, being the founders, consider the political parties to be more like their private properties, rather than as a common association that represents general interest. A remaining challenge is the empowerment of their local branches and especially the involvement of the membership on drafting policies and selection of party representatives.

3. What have you done to promote internal democratization of political parties?

Thanks to the "Internal Democracy in Political Parties" project, within a year we trained over 400 representatives for democratic practices of locally popular political parties, including branch chairs, local assembly members and other party members. Also, through continuous advocacy and publishing reports on this topic, we tried to increase the awareness of members and leaders of political parties on the importance of internal party democracy.

4. Has your project affected the political parties to be more democratic and how?

Our largest concentration is on the broad membership and branches, where the results are slower but in the long run are larger. During this period, the biggest impact we see is the steps taken by the political parties in increasing financial transparency and periodic reporting to the membership.

5. Will the quality of democratic representation improve in the next Parliament of Kosovo?

Everything will depend on the progress of the June 8 election. The more free, fair, and regular these elections are, the greater the democratic representation will be. The list of candidates for MP, however, was followed by much unhappiness as a result of non-adherence to internal democratic practices.

Consultative committee established in municipality of Novoberda

The Advocacy Training and Resource Center is advocating for the establishment of consultative committees in four Kosovo municipalities: Gjilan, Novoberda, Kamenica and Vitia, in order to enable citizens' participation in the decision making process. Read more on this process.

Trainings for municipality authorities and civil society

Training on policy-making

On 16 April 2014, Democracy for Development (D4D) Institute has organized its first training module for membership groups on the policy-making cycle for a more inclusive representation in Kosovo.
